FOREWORD

The microfilm edition of the general correspondence in the John Nicholson Papers and this descriptive guide are the third and last in the series which the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission has produced with the aid of a grant from the National Historical Publications Commission as part of a program to make important source collections more widely available for research by scholars and students. We in Pennsylvania have long been interested in the multiplication of sources in printed form or on microfilms as a practical means of encouraging sound historical research and writing in the field of Pennsylvania history. Therefore, we are grateful for the support of the National Historical Publications Commission in the microfilming of three source collections of importance to American history in the Pennsylvania State Archives. Moreover, we welcomed the opportunity to gain experience and technical guidance through association with this valuable Federal program, which has developed standards and specifications to make microfilm reproductions more usable and easier to consult.

It has been an honor and a pleasure to take part in this national program to make available the raw materials which are the essential basis for good history. It is gratifying, too, to see how similar projects sponsored by the National Historical Publications Commission in institutions in other states have produced microfilm editions of sources important to Pennsylvania, of which the most obvious are the Timothy Pickering Papers and the Winthrop Sargent Papers, produced by the Massachusetts Historical Society. Since the Province and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania affected and were affected by developments far beyond their boundaries, continuing and successful efforts of the National Historical Publications Commission to encourage microfilm editions are likely to produce much more of value to research in Pennsylvania history.

We expect that the experience and knowledge gained through this cooperative project will make it possible for the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission to undertake the preparation of microfilm editions of other source collections which are of special importance to Pennsylvania historians.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In the preparation of this microfilm edition of the John Nicholson Papers we have again been indebted to Dr. Oliver W. Holmes, Executive Director of the National Historical Publications Commission, and to his assistant, Fred Shelley, for patient understanding and helpful advice in every difficulty which was encountered. We also appreciate the interest and support of the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission, of Dr. S. K. Stevens, its Executive Director, and of his deputy, William J. Wewer, which made possible the publication of the descriptive guides.

This microfilm project has continued to involve many members of the staff of the Bureau of Archives and History, with the co-operation and advice of William H. Work, Chief of the Division of Archives and Manuscripts, and William A. Hunter, Chief of the Division of History. Miss Martha L. Simonetti, Associate Archivist, as assistant project director supervised the handling and final arrangement of the papers, and checked and proofread the guide. George R. Beyer, Assistant Archivist, edited the microfilm, set up the records for filming, prepared targets and directions for the operator, and carefully checked the finished film. Mrs. Beatrice Sariano, of the clerical staff of the Division of History, operated the microfilm camera; targets and roll notes for the film were typed by Mrs. Betty Wilcox, of the Archives clerical staff, and much of the final copy for the guide was typed by Miss Victoria Daugherty, typist in the Bureau office. Harold L. Myers, Associate Historian, handled arrangements for printing the guide; and Henry Bown, Assistant Archivist, assisted Miss Simonetti in proofreading it.

The John Nicholson Papers were arranged, inventoried, and listed some years ago by Dr. Frank B. Evans, former State Archivist, now on the staff of the National Archives; and by Miss Simonetti. Their descriptive inventory and list of correspondents have been incorporated with some revisions in this Guide to the Microfilm of the John Nicholson Papers.

INTRODUCTION

This microfilm edition of John Nicholson Papers reproduces in twenty-one rolls twenty-eight boxes of general correspondence (1772-1819) from this important manuscript collection in the Pennsylvania State Archives, thus including the series of greatest interest to researchers. The legal papers (1768-1800), the general business accounts (1776-1800), the individual business accounts (1787-1800), the impeachment papers (1777-1794), and the estate settlement papers (1783-1852) have not been microfilmed, primarily because they would have added greatly to the length of the film without a corresponding increase in usable historical data. Three folders of letterpress copies (1798-1800) have been omitted from the general correspondence because it is virtually impossible to read them.

The John Nicholson Papers, which are designated as Manuscript Group 96 in the State Archives, are personal, business, and legal papers from the estate of John Nicholson (?-1800), who was Comptroller General of Pennsylvania from 1782 to 1794, and who was also important as a financier, promoter, and land speculator. These private and business papers were sequestered by the Commonwealth in the course of the legal proceedings to settle his accounts as Comptroller General and to satisfy the claims of his private creditors; therefore, they are properly known in the State Archives as the Sequestered John Nicholson Papers. In bulk, these papers amount to about sixty-five cubic feet, and they number almost 32,000 items, of which more than 26,000 have been filmed. This manuscript group is distinct from Record Group 4, Records of the Office of the Comptroller General, 1762-1810, which amounts to 220 cubic feet, and of which a large proportion relates to his service in public office.

John Nicholson was born in Wales and emigrated to Philadelphia with his brother Samuel before the American Revolution. According to his obituary, which may have been written by his partner Robert Morris, his parents saw to it that he had "a liberal education" and brought him up "in the paths of piety, industry, and application to business," in which his natural talents grew with experience to give him "a facility in adjusting and settling the most intricate affairs with dispatch unequalled."¹ Even a critical investigator of his accounts described him as "a gentleman of active business habits, ¹Obituary in Poulson's American Daily Advertiser, December 8, 1800.

of untiring industry and high intellectual attainments," and added: "His diaries and letter books, kept for many years, in which are minutely detailed, with the most perfect accuracy, the daily transactions of his chequered life, clearly evince, that his was no ordinary mind, but that great financial skill and eminent talents, shone conspicuously throughout his public career."²

Nicholson began his rise in public office as clerk to the Board of Treasury of the Continental Congress in 1778. Congress accepted his resignation on March 12, 1781, when he entered the service of the Commonwealth as one of the auditors for settling the accounts of the Pennsylvania Line. A year later, on April 13, 1782, the legislature appointed him to the newly-created office of Comptroller General, which had broad powers to manage the financial affairs of the State. These powers were further increased as other duties and offices were conferred upon him; in 1785 he was authorized to collect and receive taxes, and in 1787 he was also made Escheator General, to liquidate the estates of those attainted of treason. As virtually the fiscal dictator of Pennsylvania, he settled accounts, collected debts, examined and reported on the accounts of other officials, exchanged old loan obligations for new, and apparently applied the same methods to keep the State's finances on an even keel as a none too scrupulous financier might use to keep his own enterprise afloat. Whether it was due to his skillful management or to the inherent advantages of Pennsylvania's economy, John Nicholson piloted the Commonwealth through to fiscal stability after the strains and stresses of the Revolution, and made it the first state to achieve this.

The Comptroller General's extensive powers in the fiscal field were virtually unchecked for many years. It was later reported that "certificates to the amount of six millions of dollars, in a few years had passed through his hands, without any other check than the occasional examination of a legislative committee, who could not possibly ascertain how his accounts stood, with the limited time allotted to such duties."³ Conservatives like Robert Morris had been partly responsible for establishing the office of Comptroller General; and, as early as 1780, Nicholson had been associated in business ventures with Morris; but Nicholson was not of their political persuasion. He had entered public life as a protege of Joseph Reed, the radical leader, and in various actions showed that he favored the radicals. Thus, Nicholson's report of an irregularity in the public accounts of the conservative Samuel Miles apparently led to that worthy's resignation from the Council of Censors in 1784, and helped to wreck the plans of the conservatives to revise the radical Constitution of 1776. He even embarrassed Robert Morris by pressing a sizable claim for the cost of supplies which Morris was to have bought the State in 1781. In 1787, Nicholson's pamphlet against the ratification of the United States Constitution helped to strengthen his party's opposition to a strong national government.

Although Nicholson was connected with the waning radical party, and although it would be natural for such extensive powers to arouse suspicion and opposition, it was not until 1789 that the legislature began to provide for any systematic checking of his accounts, and not until 1790 that a serious attempt was made to remove him from office. This failed because his services were considered necessary in settling Pennsylvania's accounts with the new Federal Treasury. To defend his actions, he published an Address to the People of Pennsylvania Containing a Narrative of the Proceedings against John Nicholson.

In 1789, the General Assembly had created the office of Register General "for the purpose of registering the accounts of the state," and provided for his inspection and examination of the transactions and accounts of the Comptroller General. As distrust of Nicholson grew, and as suspicions arose that he was using his office for private gain, other measures were passed to protect the Commonwealth against any defalcations. Finally, when Christian Febiger, the State Treasurer, charged that Nicholson had gained some $60,000 for himself and his friends by exchanging for United States bonds some State loan certificates which he had picked up for next to nothing, the State House of Representatives resolved on April 5, 1793, to impeach John Nicholson, to institute a suit against him for the recovery of funds which he had allegedly diverted, and to appoint a committee to examine his accounts and make a report. The committee, which was made up of Benjamin R. Morgan, Albert Gallatin, and Cadwallader Evans, reported him a public defaulter to a large amount. The trial in the State Senate was protracted and confusing. The House prosecutors were unable to muster a two-thirds vote against him on any of seven counts. In fact, a majority voted in his favor on all but two charges. Accordingly, he was declared not guilty, but his opponents quickly resorted to other means. The House and Senate passed a joint resolution asking Governor Mifflin to remove him. Before Mifflin could act, however, Nicholson resigned his offices on April 11, 1794, and closed his official career. He remained liable for the settlement of his accounts as Comptroller General, and thereafter until far into the nineteenth century the Commonwealth endeavored to collect from him or from his estate the large sums which he appeared to owe for money drawn from the State Treasury without legal authorization "and for certificates which have been received by him, and for which he has not accounted."⁴ Nicholson himself always maintained that, when a final reckoning was made, it would be found that he owed the State nothing, but he died without making an attempt to shed light on his accounts. An Act of 1843 did release the State lien on all the lands belonging to his estate "as if the same had never existed,"⁵ but this was done mainly to remove the cloud on land titles which this lien had caused in extensive areas of the Commonwealth.

After his resignation, Nicholson turned his attention away from government and entirely to land speculation and development, in which he had already been involved extensively. Whether he had mishandled State funds or not, he certainly used the opportunities and the influence of his high office for his own financial gain. Thus, in 1792, while he was negotiating with the United States Treasury for Pennsylvania's purchase of the Erie Triangle, he personally obtained warrants from the State Land Office to cover all the lands in the Triangle; and, in 1794, while Pennsylvania troops and settlers were forbidden to enter the Triangle because of Indian troubles, he had all these warrants surveyed by the State's District Surveyor, Thomas Rees. These lands and other lands along Beaver Creek were the basis for the Pennsylvania Population Company which he had organized in 1792, with himself, Aaron Burr, Robert Morris, and James Wilson as its leading stockholders.

When Nicholson left public office, he became the partner of Robert Morris, with whom he had already been associated in various business dealings. In 1792 Morris and Nicholson had sold 200,000 acres of land on the North Branch of the Susquehanna to French royalist refugees. After the Frenchmen proved unable to meet the terms of their contract, the Asylum Company was formed to hold and sell the lands. After 1794, Morris and Nicholson joined in many other land speculations, of which the most important was the North American Land Company. Founded in 1795 with James Greenleaf as a third partner, this company claimed to have as its capital six million acres of land in Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Kentucky. Morris and Nicholson also acquired many lots in the new District of Columbia, and built many of the buildings which were standing in the nation's capital when the government moved there. Nicholson alone promoted the Territorial Land Company in 1795, with lands in the South Western Territory. His final effort came in 1791 with the Pennsylvania Land Company, which had as its capital his lands and estates in Philadelphia and eighteen Pennsylvania counties.

Nicholson's fertile and enterprising mind led him into many other schemes for the advancement of his fortunes, for the improvement of the lands he sought to sell, and for the benefit of his state and nation. His agents in Europe encouraged immigration to the United States, and he formed a society to aid the newcomers. The movement for internal improvements—for canals and roads which would help to open new lands for settlement—had his hearty support; and he was deeply involved in the Delaware and Schuylkill Navigation Canal Company. Nicholson had a button works and a glass works; he financed frontier traders like Mathias Hollenbeck; and he was a partner in an iron works in Fayette County. His plans for settling western lands, with special inducements to first comers, with company storehouses to provide tools and other necessities, and with other assistance in the early stages, were not without merit, but they collapsed in disorder when the inflationary bubble burst.

The fever of land speculation reached its peak about 1796 and then began to wane as it became evident that the promoters had greatly over-estimated the demand for lands. They fell upon dark days. Robert Morris went to debtors' prison in 1798, while John Nicholson hoped against hope and fought on to restore the fortunes of the partnership. Finally, early in the winter of 1799-1800, he had to join Morris in prison. Even behind bars, Nicholson continued to grasp at straws, and began a new venture, a daily newspaper with the appropriate title of The Supporter or Daily Repast. This began on April 4, 1800, dwindled to a weekly in September, and reached its last known issue (No. 133) on November 10. All his hope failing, Nicholson became ill and died on December 5, 1800. He left business debts of more than four million dollars, while the lien of the Commonwealth against his estate for alleged shortages in his public accounts was originally about $110,000. The Commonwealth, private creditors, and local tax collectors were involved for many years in confused litigation, attempting to collect what was owed.

Contemporaries mention John Nicholson's many benefactions and deeds of kindness to the poor and humble. Benjamin Rush tells of attending a dinner with John Nicholson on the occasion of building "an African Church" in Philadelphia in 1793. After they had dined, all the Negroes came up to Nicholson to thank him for financial aid to their church, and one old man voiced these striking words, "May you live long sir, and when you die, may you not die eternally."⁶ The great Comptroller General was to die in disgrace and ruin in a few years' time, but this incident and its recorder bear witness to the humanity and kindness of John Nicholson.

Undoubtedly, John Nicholson rendered great services to the Commonwealth by bringing it through the Revolutionary period on a sound fiscal basis, while meeting all its obligations to the Continental Congress. His ruinous speculation in lands, which wrecked his fortune and hastened his death, certainly caused much hardship to individuals who trusted in his inducements to invest in land; but in this he can be ranked with others like Robert Morris and James Wilson who also followed the visionary lure of land speculation, but who still command respect for their great contributions in founding the State and nation.

According to a statement by the heirs of John Nicholson in 1839, the Commonwealth seized "a large mass of his papers, including his diaries and other private papers (and) titles to property in this state and other states" about the year 1800; and the laws of 1806 and 1807, which set up a board of commissioners to make compromises and sell Nicholson's lands to discharge the State lien, authorized the seizure of other papers.⁷ Initially, they were in the custody of the Comptroller General; but, like the Baynton, Wharton, and Morgan Papers, they passed into the care of the Nicholson Commissioners and were placed in the State Land Office to be readily accessible for consultation. Sometime in this period the papers were studied by State Senator David Fullerton, whose signed comments, "of no use," "of no value," and the like, are to be found on some documents. The Act of March 11, 1843, which released the State lien and abolished the Nicholson Court of Pleas, placed "all the records, books, papers, drafts, vouchers, and documents" in care of the Surveyor General—that is, in the Land Office.⁸ Under the Constitution of 1874, the Land Office became the Bureau of Land Records of the Department of Internal Affairs. The Bureau of Land Records began the transfer of John Nicholson Papers to the State Archives in August, 1957, but retained custody of the records dealing with Nicholson's lands.

It should be added that the John Nicholson Papers did not all come to the State Archives as provided by law through the various agencies entrusted with their care. Some apparently remained in the Comptroller General's offices and descended to the Auditor General, who in turn transferred them to the State Library at the time when it was responsible for the Archives. There is even a hair-raising tale of a last-minute rescue from a papermill. Moreover, some of Nicholson's personal correspondence was intermixed with his official papers as Comptroller General, and not restored to its proper place until the final reorganization of Manuscript Group 96 and Record Group 4.

No full-length biography of John Nicholson has ever been written, but Norman B. Wilkinson's dissertation on "Land Policy and Speculation in Pennsylvania, 1779-1800,"⁹ gives much attention to Nicholson's activities as a land speculator. The detailed record of his trial by the State Senate on the impeachment charges is in Pennsylvania State Trials, Volume I, edited and published by Edmund Hogan in 1794. This was not an official publication but a private venture to which Nicholson and many other important participants subscribed. It provides a great mass of conflicting testimony, evidence, and attorneys' arguments to edify or confuse an inquiring biographer.

For such a work the manuscript materials are rich and varied. The largest single blocks are in the Pennsylvania State Archives in the John Nicholson Papers (Manuscript Group 96) and in the Records of the Comptroller General (Record Group 4), but there is a great deal of significant material in other depositories. The Historical Society of Pennsylvania has documents relating to Nicholson and his activities in at least fifteen collections. There are seven volumes of John Nicholson Letter Books, 1775-1798; a thousand items in the Pennsylvania Population Company Papers; ten boxes relating to the Asylum Company, John Nicholson's land transactions, the Pennsylvania Population Company, and the North American Land Company in the Gratz Collections; a volume of deeds for the land owned by Morris, Nicholson, and Greenleaf in various southern states; Asylum Company Papers and Minutes; and many items in other collections. Correspondence with Nicholson is also found in the Morris Family Papers in the University of Virginia Library, Charlottesville, Virginia, and in the Robert Morris Papers in the Henry E. Huntington Library and Art Gallery, Pasadena, California. The Western Reserve Historical Society, Cleveland, Ohio, has his Account Current Book with Robert Morris; and the private letter book of Robert Morris in the Library of Congress includes letters to Nicholson.

The accompanying microfilm includes only the 28 boxes of General Correspondence, 1778-1816, from the John Nicholson Papers; but the descriptive inventory covers the entire collection. Because of the continued use of these papers in involved legal proceedings for almost half a century, and because of the diverse ways in which they reached the Archives, their original order was completely lost. To facilitate their use in research, they have been arranged in six sub-groups, of which the General Correspondence is the first. The descriptive inventory is followed by an alphabetical list of correspondents in the General Correspondence, giving name of correspondent, place, date, and frame number.

In the list the roll numbers are emphasized by capitals, and the frame numbers are given in parentheses following each entry and outside the period. Occasionally, cross-references are given to other entries on the film, and then roll and frame numbers are given in italics in parentheses and within the period. In most cases the list gives only the first frame number for each correspondent, for the extent of the material can easily be determined from the first frame number for the succeeding entry. At the end of a roll, however, both the first and last frame numbers are given. On the microfilm itself, a small circle in the upper left corner of a frame signals the beginning of a document. It should be added that the entries in the list of correspondents are based almost entirely on the documents and their endorsements, but that abbreviations have been used arbitrarily for some months and states, and for the place most frequently mentioned—Philadelphia.
